British cuisine is the heritage of cooking traditions and practices of Great Britain and Ireland.

British fare has distinctive national varieties in the form of English, Scottish, Welsh and Irish cuisines, and has also been strongly influenced by other cuisines from around the world. New foodstuffs were introduced over many centuries, from sausages in Roman times to tea, sugar and citrus fruits in the Middle Ages, maize, potatoes and tomatoes in the Columbian Exchange after 1492, and spicy curry sauces from India in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Examples of historical British foods include: Cheddar, Stilton, and other cheeses; pickled onions; mustard, Worcestershire, and other sauces and condiments; porridge; vegetable hotpot; pottage; Scotch broth; cock-a-leekie soup; neeps and tatties; Colcannon; Woolton vegetable pie; Welsh rabbit; boxty; tatties and herring; fish and chips; terrines; Shepherd's pie; pork pie, Cornish pasty, bridie, and other meat pies; roast beef; Yorkshire pudding; Irish stew; bangers and mash; tripe; Scottish eggs; toad in the hole; Country Captain; kedgeree; curries and chutneys; teacakes; crumpets; soda bread; bara brith; bannocks; scones; gingerbread; Devonshire cream; marmalade; Christmas pudding; mincemeat pie; comfit; trifle.

Please bring a copy of your recipe and any other information to help with Randy's article for REPAST.

$5.00 per member, $10 non-member partner

Table service and non-alcoholic beverages provided.
